Black Femininity and Bodies

Portrayal of black women in the media has often been limited to inaccurate, two-dimensional and detrimental depictions

- Sapphire/ “Angry Black Woman”
- Jezebel
- Mammy

Defeminized even when (hyper)sexualized

Rooted in transphobia
Black Femininity and Bodie

- Generalization and misrepresentation of black women have taken its place out of media and fiction into reality
- Common to publicly defeminize black women
  - Serena and Venus Williams
  - Michelle Obama
  - Megan thee Stallion
  - Laverne Cox
  - Leslie Jones
- Exclusion of black women as feminine and powerful with a different traits
  - Includes masculine and feminine
Black Femininity and Bodies

- Much of Mickalene Thomas’ work shifts the narrative from what has been written by racists and sexists to “celebrating black femininity and sexuality in a different way by claiming the space that seemed to be voided”
- Just as there is ambiguity in the terms “sexuality” and “masculinity”, there is ambiguity to “who a black woman is” that deserves to be represented
- “To see yourself and for others to see you is a form of validation”
- Proper representation is necessary and vital
