

Humanities Institute at Stony Brook Presents

Memory: Culture, Media, Cognition

Friday October 11, 2013 @ Stony Brook Manhattan
1:30 - 6:00 PM 387 Park Avenue South

Barbie Zelizer

“Why Journalism Has Always Been Part of Memory’s Landscape”

Thomas Elsaesser

“Home Movies
and Memory”

Memory scholars in the humanities and social and cognitive sciences are increasingly cognizant that the dualism separating scholars who study memory as cognitive process and those who study memory as manifested in historical, cultural, media and literary representations belies the complexity of actual memory practices. The purpose of this symposium is to ask whether or not a more holistic perspective on memory can emerge from a conversation across disciplines and domains of knowledge.

For more information:

www.stonybrook.edu/humanities
e.ann.kaplan@stonybrook.edu