Discussants

PATRICK IBER, UNIVERSITY OF WISCONSIN AT MADISON
MARY KAY VAUGHAN, UNIVERSITY OF MARYLAND

Integrating diplomatic, political and cultural history, Zolov will examine Mexican internationalism during a pivotal moment in the Global Cold War and the multitudinous, transnational forces that shaped Mexican political subjectivities during this period and beyond.

Co-sponsored by Latin American & Caribbean Studies and the Institute for Globalization Studies at Stony Brook

Eric Zolov is Professor of History and former Director of Latin American & Caribbean Studies at Stony Brook University. The author of Refried Elvis: The Rise of the Mexican Counterculture, he has published widely on popular culture, twentieth-century Mexico, and U.S.-Latin American relations. He is currently finishing a co-authored book on the 2019 social uprising in Chile interpreted through the lens of protest graphics.
