“Japanese Poetry in the Digital Age”

Wednesday, Nov. 16, 2022, 6:05-7:25 pm EST

Via Zoom, Register here.

In this talk, we will explore how poets in Japan grappled with digital media from its early days to the present, touching on poetry’s relationship to computing, the internet, social media, video games, augmented reality, and more. We will see not only how “new media” affected how poetry was made, but the other way around as well—in other words, how poets used their work to rethink “the digital” itself anew.

Andrew Campana is an assistant professor of Japanese literature and media at Cornell University, where he researches Japanese poetry, digital media, and cultures of disability.
